

STORYTELLING TECHNIQUES

from

TED

Master The One Thing All Great TED Talks Have in Common

by AKASH KARIA

#1 best-selling author of

“How to Deliver a Great TED Talk”

© 2013 by Akash Karia

All rights reserved.

Copyeditor: Marcia C. Abramson

eBook creator: Neeraj Chandra

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form by any means without the expressed permission of the author. This includes reprints, excerpts, photocopying, recording, or any future means of reproducing text. If you would like to do any of the above, please seek permission first by contacting us at <http://AkashKaria.com>

BOOKS BY AKASH:

How to Deliver a Great TED Talk

Storytelling Techniques for Powerful Presentations

Public Speaking Mastery

Own the Room

Public Speaking Tips from the Pros

Stop Negative Thinking!

How Successful People Think Differently

How to Persuade People to Do Stuff

TED:ology

Captivate! Presentation Secrets from TED

How to Design TED Worthy Presentation Slides

CHAPTER ONE

THE MAGIC INGREDIENT IN DELIVERING A GREAT TED TALK

What is the secret to delivering a great TED talk?

What is the magic ingredient that makes a TED talk captivating?

TED talks (www.Ted.com) are some of the most inspiring and amazing talks you'll watch. Each presentation is eighteen minutes long, meaning that speakers on the TED stage have a difficult job. They have to distill their expertise and their life's work into only eighteen minutes. Essentially, they only have time to share one idea, which requires them to ask the question:

“If I could leave my audience with only one single key takeaway message, what would it be? If my audience was to forget everything else I said, what one single idea or lesson would I want them to remember?”

Not only are the ideas that are shared on the TED stage profound, the speakers themselves are some of the best presenters you'll ever see. Unlike the boring, dull, lifeless corporate presentations you hear these days, TED talks are powerful and captivating. They keep you hooked onto every word. The speakers on the TED stage are confident, powerful and persuasive.

So, what is it that makes these TED talks so inspiring?

What are the secrets of delivering a powerful TED talk?

And more importantly, how can you use those secrets to make your presentations more powerful, dynamic and engaging?

To try to answer these questions, I studied over 200 of the best TED talks. I broke each TED talk down in terms of structure, message and delivery.

So, what did I discover?

What was the magic ingredient that made a TED talk captivating?

What was it that made the best TED talks inspiring - which is a word that is often associated with TED talks?

Here's what I discovered. After studying over 200 TED talks, the one commonality among all the great TED talks is that they contain stories. Essentially, the best speakers on the TED stage were the ones who had mastered the art of storytelling. They had mastered how to craft and present their stories in a way that allowed them to share their message with the world without seeming like they were lecturing their audience. That's just one of the advantages of stories - they allow you to share your message without your audience feeling like you're preaching to them, which in turn makes it easier for them to accept your message.

In this short guide, you are going to learn how to use stories to make your presentations engaging and inspiring. You'll learn how to craft stories that keep your audience mesmerized. You'll also learn how to use stories to make your message memorable.

By the time you've finished this guide, you will have picked up twenty-three principles on how to create stories that keep your audiences hooked onto your every word. Whether you are giving a TED talk or a corporate presentation, you'll be able to apply the principles used in this guide to make your next talk a roaring success.

Ready? Let's get started...

IN A NUTSHELL

- The one thing that all great TED speakers have in common is that they are master storytellers.

CHAPTER TWO

THE ‘STORY START’

How many speakers have you seen that hooked you into their presentation within the first thirty seconds?

How many times have you attended a presentation, and within the first thirty seconds, thought, “Wow, this is going to be good!”

Not many?

Don’t worry.

As a public speaking coach, one of the questions I get asked most often is, “What’s the best way to begin my presentation? How do I open my speech?”

The opening of a presentation is one of the most important parts of the presentation. If you don’t grab your audience’s attention within the first thirty seconds, they are going to mentally tune out of it - and it’s going to be very difficult to bring them back. You only get one chance at making a first impression, so you better utilize it well.

I have seen too many speakers open their presentations in boring, dull and lifeless ways. The most common (and thus boring) opening is, “Thank you for inviting me. My name is XYZ and I want to talk to you about...” This opening literally sucks the excitement out of the room. If your audience members were excited about listening to you, they certainly aren’t going to be after that opening!

So, what is the best way to open a speech?

You’ve probably guessed it: open with a story.

In her great TED talk (<http://bit.ly/10gmj3t>), titled The Power of Introverts, Susan Cain masterfully hooked her audience into her speech with the following opening. I highly encourage you to watch her speech, if you haven’t already.

Analyzing the effect a presentation has on you is a fantastic way to learn what works and what doesn’t when it comes to public speaking. Therefore, as you read the following opening, consider how it makes you feel. Does it arouse your curiosity? Does it invoke any memories? Does it make you interested in the rest of the presentation?

“When I was nine years old I went off to summer camp for the first time. And my mother packed me a suitcase full of books, which to me seemed like a perfectly natural thing to do. Because in my family, reading was the primary group activity. And this might sound antisocial to you, but for us it was really just a different way of being social. You have the animal warmth of your family sitting right next to you, but you are also free to go roaming around the adventure-land inside your own mind. And I had this idea that camp was going to be just like this, but better...”

- Susan Cain, TED talk (<http://bit.ly/10gmj3t>)

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS ARE BORING

Notice how Susan doesn't open her speech with introductory remarks. She doesn't bore her audience with an introduction of herself (the introducer/emcee should be the one who introduces you before you get up on stage). She doesn't bore her audience with gratitude by trying to express how thankful she is that she was invited to speak at TED. Instead, she immediately dives into a story. The best way to thank your audience for the opportunity to speak to them is to deliver a speech that keeps them engaged, interested and involved.

DIVE INTO THE STORY

The reason Susan's opening is powerful is because she dives straight into the story. Starting your presentation with a story one of the best techniques for getting your audience's attention:

“When I was nine years old I went off to summer camp for the first time. And my mother packed me a suitcase full of books...”

The above opening is powerful because:

- It is different from the way most speakers open their presentations. Audiences hate predictable, boring openings. If your opening can be guessed by your audience, it's boring! A story is different from the way most speakers open their presentations.

- It takes the audience along on a journey. Stories take the audience on a mental journey. As you read Susan's opening, you might have pictured a nine-year-old version of Susan heading off to summer camp. The story had you mentally engaged - you couldn't resist it even if you tried. As executive speech coach Patricia Fripp puts it, "a well told story is irresistible." Stories ignite the listener's imagination, and therefore they give the audience no choice but to be tuned into the presentation.
- It's relatable. Stories cause people to search their memory banks for similar, relatable experiences. Perhaps, while thinking about Susan's summer camp, your imagination borrowed details from your summer camp. Because the story is relatable, it builds a connection between you and the speaker.
- People are hardwired to listen to stories. Stories are the way human knowledge was passed down before the written word. Storytelling is hardwired into our brains. It's the natural way that our brains learn and process information.

So, how you should open your next presentation or speech? With a story. Opening with a story is a tested and proven method for grabbing audience attention and keeping your audience mentally engaged.

IN A NUTSHELL

- Analyzing the effect a presentation has on you is a fantastic way to learn what works and what doesn't when it comes to public speaking.
- If you don't grab your audience's attention within the first thirty seconds, your audience will mentally tune out of your presentation.
- Don't bore your audience with introductory remarks. Begin with a story.
- Stories are powerful because people are hardwired to listen to stories.
- Stories take your audience on a mental journey. Audiences cannot resist a well-told story even if they try.

CHAPTER THREE

THE SURPRISING ELEMENT THAT MAKES A STORY IRRESISTIBLE

What is it that hooks us into certain stories?

Why is it that some stories have us sitting on the edge of our seats?

What mysterious elements make a story gripping?

If you want to learn how to keep your audiences engaged in your presentation, you must understand this next principle.

The number one thing that makes a story irresistible - that has audience members sitting on the edge of their seats, totally captivated by your every word - is conflict.

What do I mean by conflict?

Conflict refers to a fight. It's a fight between opposing forces. A fight between life and death. A fight between hate and forgiveness. A fight between freedom and oppression. As long as there are two strong, opposing forces that make the outcome of the story uncertain, a story will be gripping. It keeps us engaged. It keeps us curious. It makes us ask the question, "What will happen next?"

A story without conflict is not a very exciting one. If there's no conflict, there's no mystery and no suspense. There's no "What will happen next?" question. Without conflict, we already know what will happen. We're not curious, and as a result, we're not engaged.

Let me give you a great example. The blockbuster movie, Titanic, is a great movie because it contains so many different conflicts. First and most obvious is the life versus death conflict. When the Titanic sinks, we're questioning, "Will they live or will they die?" In fact, a lot of the exciting scenes in the movie contain smaller conflicts. For example, during one scene, we find out there aren't enough lifeboats on the ship, so the conflict becomes "Who does and who doesn't get into the lifeboat?"

The second major conflict in the movie is regarding whether or not the two main characters, Jack and Rose, will manage to stay together. Will love triumph or will society separate them because they are from vastly different backgrounds?

Without all the conflict, Titanic would not be such a great movie. After all, not many people would pay to watch Titanic if all that happened was the two characters met on a ship, fell in love and lived happily ever after. Yes, we would like to think that we would be interested in a story without conflict because it wouldn't put us through emotional turmoil, but the surprising truth is that the conflict in the story is what keeps audience members watching a movie. It's also what will keep your audience hooked into your presentation.

In her TED talk on Why Domestic Violence Victims Never Leave, Leslie Morgan Steiner shares her very powerful personal story. The TED talk is one of the most gripping and powerful ones I've ever watched (<http://bit.ly/14lqWdl>). Why is it so powerful? Because the conflict in the story is so strong. Here's part of the transcript from Leslie's speech:

“Conor used my anger as an excuse to put both of his hands around my neck as and to squeeze so tightly that I could not breathe or scream, and he used the chokehold to hit my head repeatedly against the wall. Five days later, the ten bruises on my neck had just faded, and I put on my mother's wedding dress, and I married him. Despite what happened, I was sure we were going to live happily ever after, because I loved him, and he loved me so very much....It was an isolated incident, and he was never going to hurt me again. It happened twice more on the honeymoon. The first time...”

Wow, isn't that a powerful conflict? When I watched her speech, I could really feel for her, even though I have never gone through a similar situation nor known anyone who has. Yet, I strongly empathized with her because the conflict was so strong - here she was being physically abused by her then-husband, but she can't leave him because she's in love with him.

Conflicts arouse the audience's emotions. Conflicts get audience members rooting for a character, hoping that the character will emerge victorious. For example, Leslie's story unconsciously made me put myself in her position - to imagine what I would do if I were in her situation. As a result, this aroused my emotions. It caused me to share an emotional bond with Leslie. This emotional connection is a must if you want to deliver a powerful talk. When you arouse your audience's emotions, they will have no choice but to be totally and completely immersed in your story.

SHARE A PERSONAL STORY

Another important lesson to learn from Leslie's TED talk is the power of personal stories. Audiences like listening to new things - new ideas, new concepts and new stories. As a public speaking coach, one of the mistakes I see some speakers make is that they use too many clichéd stories.

One of the most clichéd stories that is repeated way too often by amateur speakers is the "starfish story" - the one where a man walking along the beach sees a young boy throwing starfishes back into the ocean. When the man tells the boy, "Why bother? There are so many starfishes you can't possibly make a difference," the boy picks up a starfish, throws it back into the ocean and says, "To that one, I made a difference."

The starfish story is a great story, but the problem is that it's been overused. Audiences are tired of hearing different speakers repeat the same story. It turns audience members off.

So, what kind of stories should you use?

Use personal stories. Personal stories are powerful because:

- They give the audience new material. Your story will be new to your audience, which makes it more interesting for them to hear.
- They improve your delivery. When you talk about events that have taken place in your life, you will naturally feel some of the emotions that you felt when those events took place. As a result, some of this emotion will show through in your delivery, resulting in a more authentic delivery. You won't have to practice your gestures and your facial expressions because all of that will come naturally when you're delivering a personal story.

As you think about crafting your personal story for your presentation, consider the conflict. Is the conflict in your story strong enough? How can you make the conflict bigger and stronger? Is it strong enough to arouse your audience's emotions? Is it going to make your audience wonder, "What's going to happen next?"

If you answered yes to those questions, then you have a story that will captivate your audience.

IN A NUTSHELL

- Share a personal story.
- The surprising element that makes a story irresistible is conflict.
- The stronger the conflict, the more captivating your story will be.
- Ask yourself, “Is the conflict in my story strong enough? Does it arouse the audience’s emotions?”
- The conflict in a story is what keeps your audience curious. The conflict is what makes the audience ask, “What will happen next?”
- No conflict = no curiosity = no interest.

CHAPTER FOUR

BRING YOUR CHARACTERS TO LIFE BY PROVIDING DETAILS

Excerpt taken from How to Deliver a Great TED Talk

Great speeches aren't just heard; they're also experienced in the audience's heads. Executive speech coach Patricia Fripp says, "People don't remember what you say as much as they remember what they see when you say it." If you want your audience to remember and experience your speech, you should paint mental images in their heads.

In his TED talk, Choice, Happiness and Spaghetti Sauce (<http://bit.ly/10glA29>), Malcolm Gladwell brings to life the character of Howard by providing lots of specific detail about him:

"Howard's about this high, and he's round, and he's in his 60s. He has big huge glasses and thinning grey hair, and he has a kind of wonderful exuberance and vitality. He has a parrot, and he loves the opera, and he's a great aficionado of medieval history. By profession, he's a psychophysicist."

- Malcolm Gladwell, TED Talk, <http://bit.ly/10glA29>

One of the things that make Gladwell such a superb storyteller is the fact that he knows how to breathe life into his characters. He does this by providing his audience with just enough sensory information to be able to picture the characters in their heads.

Another thing to learn from Gladwell is the way he follows the principle of showing rather than telling. He says that Howard "has a parrot, and he loves the opera, and he's a great aficionado of medieval history." This information gives you a hint about Howard's personality – it shows you his quirkiness rather than simply telling you about it.

Similarly, if a character in your speech is an alcoholic, instead of simply saying that "John had an alcohol problem," you should show this by saying "Every day after work, John would come back home and pop open a bottle of beer. He would sit at his table, alone, downing one bottle after another, until finally, around midnight, dozens of empty beer bottles later, he would fall asleep slumped over the table."

In your speeches and presentations, provide specific, sensory details about your characters to make them come alive in your audience's minds. Follow the principle of showing rather than telling.

IN A NUTSHELL

- Bring your characters alive by providing details about their appearance
- Give your audience enough sensory information to construct a mental image of your main characters
- Show, don't tell

CHAPTER FIVE

TURNING YOUR STORIES INTO MENTAL MOVIES FOR YOUR AUDIENCE

Excerpt taken from How to Deliver a Great TED Talk

Mike Rowe is the host of the series “Dirty Jobs” on Discovery Channel. In his speech on “Learning from Dirty Jobs” (<http://bit.ly/10gmdsr>) Rowe talks about a job where he has to castrate sheep. Examine the following portion of his speech:

“In the space of about two seconds, Albert had the knife between the cartilage of the tail, right next to the butt of the lamb, and very quickly the tail was gone and in the bucket that I was holding. A second later, with a big thumb and a well calloused forefinger, he had the scrotum firmly in his grasp. And he pulled it toward him, like so, and he took the knife and he put it on the tip. Now you think you know what's coming, Michael -- you don't, OK? He snips it, throws the tip over his shoulder, and then grabs the scrotum and pushes it upward, and then his head dips down, obscuring my view, but what I hear is a slurping sound, and a noise that sounds like Velcro being yanked off a sticky wall...”

- Mike Rowe, TED Talk, <http://bit.ly/10gmdsr>

Did you feel grossed out by the description?

Did you perhaps scrunch up your face in disgust, as I did when I heard that portion of the speech?

Did that scene play out mentally in your head like a movie?

Why did that scene affect you so powerfully?

The reason that the scene affects you so much is because it contains a lot of sensory information that brings the scene alive in your mind. Because it contains so many vivid details, you can't help but watch the scene playing out in your head.

The secret to turning your stories into mental movies for your audience is to make sure your scene is rich in sensory inputs. There are four senses that you need to cover: Visual, Auditory, Kinesthetic and Smell (VAKS). (Thanks to Craig Valentine for teaching me this technique. <http://www.CraigValentine.com>)

Let's examine each of the VAKS in Rowe's speech:

Visual - what could you see in the story? You could see the knife and you could see the man firmly holding the sheep's scrotum with his "big thumb and well-calloused forefinger."

Auditory - what could you hear? You could hear the slurping sound, "like Velcro being yanked off a sticky wall."

Kinesthetic - what could you feel? You could probably feel Albert firmly holding the scrotum in hand. You might even have been able to feel the sheep's pain (even though that isn't specifically mentioned in the scene).

Smell - what could you smell? In this particular scene, there is no input for smell. However, smell is a powerful sense for transporting your audience into your scene.

If you want to turn your stories into mental movies for your audience, make sure you cover the VAKS. As this example shows, you don't have to give details about all four sensory inputs, but it is recommended that you do cover at least three out of the four VAKS in order to fully transport your audience into your story.

Also, as this example shows, the descriptions of your scenes don't need to be very long. You're telling a story, not writing a novel! In fact, the shorter your descriptions, the faster your story will move along and the more impactful it will be.

IN A NUTSHELL

Turn your scenes into mental movies using the VAKS:

- Visual - what could you see?
- Auditory - what could you hear?
- Kinesthetic - what could you feel?
- Smell - what could you smell?
- Pack in as many of the senses as possible
- Keep your descriptions short

CHAPTER SIX

PROVIDE SPECIFIC DETAILS

When crafting your personal story, it's important to keep in mind that you need to provide as many specific details as possible. In order to turn your story into a mental movie for your audience, provide audience members with as many specific details as possible. For example, instead of saying, "The man was tall," say "He was about 6 foot 5 inches." Instead of saying, "I was speaking to a large group of people," say "I was speaking to a group of 500 CEOs."

Do you see how the specific details help in seeing the scene? Non-specific statements such as "the man was tall" don't help your audience members picture the characters and the scene in their mind. Saying, "He was about 6 foot 5, with ripped muscles" provides enough detail for your audience to be able to see the characters and the scene.

Also, according to research that I highlight in my book, How to Deliver a Great TED Talk, adding very specific details to your talk increases the internal credibility of your presentation.

For example, consider the following section from Leslie Morgan Steiner's speech:

"Conor used my anger as an excuse to put both of his hands around my neck and to squeeze so tightly that I could not breathe or scream, and he used the chokehold to hit my head repeatedly against the wall. Five days later, the ten bruises on my neck had just faded..."

Notice how, instead of saying "A couple of days later," Leslie says "five days later." First, this gives the audience a concrete timeline of the events. Second, it adds credibility to the story.

Let's take another example from a great TED talk by Dr. Jill Bolte Taylor. In her TED talk, Stroke of Insight (<http://bit.ly/19yP57X>), Dr. Taylor says:

"But on the morning of December 10, 1996, I woke up to discover that I had a brain disorder of my own."

Do you notice how much more powerful that is than saying, "But one morning a couple of years ago, I woke up to discover I had a brain disorder of my own"? Also, doesn't giving the specific date - December 10, 1996 - sound more believable than saying, “a couple of years ago”?

When crafting your story, avoid non-specific language. Provide specific details about the characters, scenes and dates. The specific details will help your audience see what you’re saying, as well as add internal credibility to your presentation.

IN A NUTSHELL

- Specific details help your audience see what you’re saying.
- Specificity adds internal credibility to your presentation.
- Always provide specific details about characters, scenes and dates.

CHAPTER SIX

THE POWER OF POSITIVE STORIES

There are two types of stories you can share with your audience: “positive-message” stories and “negative-message” stories. Here’s what I mean.

Positive-message stories are stories where the main character manages to overcome the conflict. The character changes for the better as a result of having overcome the conflict. This type of story shows the audience what they should do and leaves them on a high note.

As an example of a positive-message story, think of the rags-to-riches story. One of my favorite movies is The Pursuit of Happyness, starring Will Smith. Based on a true story, Will Smith plays the role of Chris Gardner. Chris Gardner has invested most of his money on a device called a bone density scanner. However, he is unable to sell the devices and ends up losing his house and his wife. He is forced to live on the streets with his son. (Side note: This is the conflict: Will they survive or perish? Will Chris be able to take care of his son or will he lose his son too? How will they overcome the difficulty?)

However, through sheer determination and hard work, Chris ends up with an unpaid six-month internship as a stockbroker. His effort pays off, he ends up with a full-time employment offer as a stockbroker, and by the end of the movie, through his hard work, he has formed his own multimillion-dollar brokerage firm.

The Pursuit of Happyness is a positive-message story because it shares with the audience a positive message - that through hard work and persistence, we can overcome even the most difficult challenges we face in life. The end of the story leaves the audience on an emotional high.

The negative-message story, as you can guess, is one where the character doesn't manage to overcome the conflict and in fact, ends up in a worse state than before. This is what I call a negative-message story because it teaches the audience what not to do. While the story may be instructive, it is not inspiring. It leaves audiences on an emotional low, which is not how you want to end your presentation.

Positive-message stories are inspiring. They leave audiences on an emotional high.

Negative-message stories are instructive but they leave audiences on an emotional low.

Whenever possible, share positive-message stories with your audience. Through the positive-message story, you will be able to educate as well as inspire your audience. The positive-message story allows you to share a motivational message with your audience without being perceived as someone who is shoving advice down their throats.

As an example of a positive message story, let's examine part of a TED talk by Sir Ken Robinson. In his great TED talk (<http://bit.ly/13GLcG3>), How Schools Kill Creativity, Sir Ken uses the following positive-message story:

I'm doing a new book at the moment called "Epiphany," which is based on a series of interviews with people about how they discovered their talent. I'm fascinated by how people got to be there. It's really prompted by a conversation I had with a wonderful woman who maybe most people have never heard of; she's called Gillian Lynne -- have you heard of her? Some have. She's a choreographer and everybody knows her work. She did "Cats" and "Phantom of the Opera." She's wonderful. I used to be on the board of the Royal Ballet in England, as you can see. Anyway, Gillian and I had lunch one day and I said, "Gillian, how'd you get to be a dancer?" And she said it was interesting; when she was at school, she was really hopeless. And the school, in the '30s, wrote to her parents and said, "We think Gillian has a learning disorder." She couldn't concentrate; she was fidgeting. I think now they'd say she had ADHD. Wouldn't you? But this was the 1930s, and ADHD hadn't been invented at this point. It wasn't an available condition. (Laughter) People weren't aware they could have that.

Anyway, she went to see this specialist. So, this oak-paneled room, and she was there with her mother, and she was led and sat on this chair at the end, and she sat on her hands for 20 minutes while this man talked to her mother about all the problems Gillian was having at school. And at the end of it -- because she was disturbing people; her homework was always late; and so on, little kid of eight -- in the end, the doctor went and sat next to Gillian and said, "Gillian, I've listened to all these things that your mother's told me, and I need to speak to her privately." He said, "Wait here. We'll be back; we won't be very long," and they went and left her. But as they went out the room, he turned on the radio that was sitting on his desk. And when they got out the room, he said to her mother, "Just stand and watch her." And the minute they left the room, she said, she was on her feet, moving to the music. And they watched for a few minutes and he turned to her mother and said, "Mrs. Lynne, Gillian isn't sick; she's a dancer. Take her to a dance school."

I said, "What happened?" She said, "She did. I can't tell you how wonderful it was. We walked in this room and it was full of people like me. People who couldn't sit still. People who had to move to think." Who had to move to think. They did ballet; they did tap; they did jazz; they did modern; they did contemporary. She was eventually auditioned for the Royal Ballet School; she became a soloist; she had a wonderful career at the Royal Ballet. She eventually graduated from the Royal Ballet School and founded her own company -- the Gillian Lynne Dance Company -- met Andrew Lloyd Weber. She's been responsible for some of the most successful musical theater productions in history; she's given pleasure to millions; and she's a multi-millionaire. Somebody else might have put her on medication and told her to calm down. (audience applause)

At the end of the story, Sir Ken Robinson received a rousing round of applause from the audience. Why? Because the story left them on an emotional high.

DIALOGUE IN STORY

Another important lesson to learn from Sir Ken Robinson is the importance of dialogue in storytelling. Throughout the above story, he uses dialogue. Here's an example:

And they watched for a few minutes and he turned to her mother and said, "Mrs. Lynne, Gillian isn't sick; she's a dancer. Take her to a dance school."

Now here's the same in narration:

"And they watched for a few minutes and the doctor told Gillian's mother that her daughter wasn't sick. She was a dancer and that she should be taken to dance school."

Do you feel the difference between dialogue and narration?

Dialogue is more powerful than narration. It puts audience members into the scene, allowing them to hear exactly what was said. Dialogue is also shorter and punchier than narration. Finally, another advantage of dialogue is that it allows you to use vocal variety - to slightly change the pace, pitch and volume of your voice to reflect the emotions and speech of the different characters in your speech. As a result, your delivery will be more dynamic and engaging.

When delivering your story, always use dialogue - not narration.

IN A NUTSHELL

- Positive-message stories are inspiring.
- Leave your audience on an emotional high.
- Use dialogue, not narration.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE SPARK, THE CHANGE AND THE TAKEAWAY

We know that the conflict in a story is what makes it exciting. And we also know that positive-message stories are what inspires audiences.

Between the conflict and the final victory of the character, we have what I refer to as the “spark.” The spark refers to the process, idea or wisdom that allows the character to overcome the conflict.

The spark is one of the most valuable parts of the story. It’s the process or the wisdom that audience members can take home with them and use to overcome conflict in their own lives.

Think about a time that you faced a difficult challenge in your life. How did you overcome it? What was the process you used to overcome the conflict? What was the wisdom that allowed you to push past the difficulty?

Let me give you a simple example. Imagine a man - we’ll call him John - who is 300 pounds overweight. [Conflict/Difficulty]: John wants to lose weight, but every time he goes on a diet, he gives up quickly because his commitment is not strong enough. As a result, he’s depressed [The Spark]: When he goes to the doctor for his yearly checkup, the doctor tells him, “John, if you don’t lose weight, you’ll be dead in five years.” This is the spark that John needs to change his life. Fast forward to a year later, and he has lost over 250 pounds and is living a happier life. [The takeaway]: If you want to achieve your goal, but don’t commit to it and don’t have a strong reason for achieving it, then you’ll never achieve it.

The above story is very simple, but I’ve made it simple to explain several critical storytelling concepts to you:

1. The Spark: The spark is the wisdom or the process that the character in your story receives in order to overcome the conflict.

In one of my stories, I talk about the time I was very excited about starting up my own business. However, one of my friends was very negative and kept on reminding me that I wouldn't be successful because I didn't have enough experience. Whenever I talked about my business, my friend would shoot down my ideas with her negativity. As a result, I struggled with thoughts of not being good enough to start a business.

The spark that allowed me to get over my friend's negativity was a quotation by Eleanor Roosevelt. It was: "No one can make you feel inferior without your consent." It was then I realized that I had given my friend permission to make me feel inferior - and at that moment in time, I made a conscious decision to not let her negativity pull me down.

What was the spark that caused you to overcome the conflict you were facing in your life? Perhaps it was a quotation you read, or advice you received from a mentor or a technique you learned from a book. Share the spark with your audience and perhaps it might just be what they need to help them overcome the challenges they may be facing.

- 2. The Change. Characters must change as a result of the conflict. There has to be a difference in the character - either the character's circumstances or his/her personality - because of having overcome the conflict. For example, in the weight loss story about John, John went from being overweight to being a thinner, healthier person.
- 3. The Takeaway. Each story must have a key takeaway message. Bill Gove, the first president of the National Speakers Association, said, "Tell a story, make a point." What's the point of your story? What's the key takeaway message of your speech? Summarize your key message in a short, memorable phrase so that your audience will remember and repeat it.

If I had to simplify the structure of a great story, here's what it would look like:

Character --> Conflict --> Spark --> Change in Character --> Takeaway Message

Let's have a look at an example of this process. We'll use Leslie Morgan Steiner's TED talk on domestic violence to look at the above structure in action. Watch Leslie's speech here (<http://bit.ly/14lqWdl>), and then we will examine the characters, conflict, spark, change and takeaway message in the speech.

Ready?

Who are the characters in Leslie's speech? The two characters in Leslie's speech are Leslie and her ex-husband. Since Leslie is standing on stage, we don't need any description of her. What about her ex-husband? What information do we have about him? Leslie tells us that her ex-husband, Conor, "had just graduated from an Ivy League school, and that he worked at a very impressive Wall Street bank ... he was smart and funny and he looked like a farm boy. He had these big cheeks, these big apple cheeks and this wheat-blond hair, and he seemed so sweet." Leslie gives us enough information about Conor to create a mental image of him in our heads.

When telling stories in your speeches and presentations, make sure that you provide some specific details about how your main characters look.

What's the conflict in Leslie's story?

"Conor used my anger as an excuse to put both of his hands around my neck as and to squeeze so tightly that I could not breathe or scream, and he used the chokehold to hit my head repeatedly against the wall. Five days later, the ten bruises on my neck had just faded, and I put on my mother's wedding dress, and I married him. Despite what happened, I was sure we were going to live happily ever after, because I loved him, and he loved me so very much....It was an isolated incident, and he was never going to hurt me again. It happened twice more on the honeymoon. The first time..."

The conflict in Leslie's story is that she is being physically abused by her then-husband but can't leave him because she's in love with him and keeps believing he will change.

What's the spark in Leslie's story?

"I was able to leave, because of one final, sadistic beating that broke through my denial. I realized that the man who I loved so much was going to kill me if I let him. So I broke the silence. I told everyone: the police, my neighbors, my friends and family, total strangers..."

The cure is that Leslie finds the courage to leave Conor because of one final beating which broke through her denial.

How does the main character in the story change as a result of the conflict? In Leslie's story, the change is that she goes from being in an abusive relationship to finally getting out of it. She goes from being in denial about her situation to finally accepting that the man she loved so much was going to kill her. Furthermore, she goes from keeping her abusive relationship a secret to sharing her story with the world so that she can help others in similar situations.

Finally, what is the takeaway message of Leslie's story? What lesson does she leave the audience with? Leslie uses her story to take us through the different steps of a domestic violence relationship, but the final takeaway message for her audience is that instead of blaming victims of violent relationships for staying in those relationships, we should "recast survivors as wonderful, loveable people with full futures. Recognize the early signs of violence and conscientiously intervene, de-escalate it, show victims a safe way out."

The storytelling structure you've learned in this book may be simple, but it's powerful. It's proven to work time and time again, so use it to make your presentation engaging and interesting!

IN A NUTSHELL

- Your story must contain the spark that allowed your character to overcome the conflict.
- Show the change in your character.
- Leave your message with a key takeaway message.

CHAPTER EIGHT

WRAP UP

The magic ingredient in all great TED talks is storytelling. If you master the art of storytelling, you'll have your audience captivated. Whether you're giving a TED talk or a corporate presentation, use stories in your presentations because stories are powerful. Stories are inherently interesting. They're memorable. And they can turn any boring presentation in a brilliant one.

Use the following twenty-three principles covered in this guide to make your next presentation an outstanding success:

1. Watch videos of great speakers. Analyzing the effect a presentation has on you is a fantastic way to learn what works and what doesn't when it comes to public speaking.
2. If you don't grab your audience's attention within the first thirty seconds, your audience will mentally tune out of your presentation.
3. Don't bore your audience with introductory remarks. Begin with a story.
4. Stories are powerful because people are hardwired to listen to stories.
5. Stories take your audience on a mental journey. Audiences cannot resist a well-told story even if they try.
6. Share a personal story.
7. The surprising element that makes a story irresistible is conflict. The stronger the conflict, the more captivating your story will be.
8. Ask yourself, "Is the conflict in my story strong enough? Does it arouse the audience's emotions?"
9. No conflict = no curiosity = no interest.
10. Bring your characters alive by providing details about their appearance.
11. Give your audience enough sensory information to construct a mental image of your main characters.
12. Show, don't tell.

13. Turn your scenes into mental movies using the VAKS.
14. Pack in as many of the senses as possible but keep your descriptions short.
15. Provide specific detail because it helps your audience see what you're saying.
16. Specificity adds internal credibility to your presentation.
17. Positive-message stories are inspiring. They allow you to share your message with your audience without lecturing them.
18. Leave your audience on an emotional high.
19. Use dialogue, not narration. Dialogue is shorter and more impactful than narration, and also allows you to use vocal variety in your delivery.
20. Your story should contain the spark that allowed your character to overcome the conflict.
21. Show the change in the character as a result of the conflict.
22. Wrap up your story by leaving your audience with a final takeaway message.
23. Make your takeaway message short so that your audience can remember and repeat it.

[QUESTIONS OR COMMENTS?]

I'd love to hear your thoughts. Email me at: akash.speaker@gmail.com

NEED HELP?

I offer one-on-one coaching over Skype. I'll help you breathe life into your presentations. We'll work on your message, structure, opening, body, closing, humor, slides and presentation delivery. Reach me at akash@akashkaria.com (or contact me on: akash.speaker@gmail.com)

LOOKING FOR A KEYNOTE SPEAKER/TRAINER?

Looking for a dynamic speaker for your next event? Looking for a trainer to help you unleash the excellence hidden inside your teams? Book as a speaker/workshop leader by contacting me on akash@akashkaria.com. Also, check out my website www.AkashKaria.com

[ALSO BY AKASH]

If you want to learn how to deliver a great TED talk by studying some of the best speakers in the world, check out:

How to Deliver a Great TED Talk:

Click here: <http://amzn.to/18fD1Tn>

"Maybe one of the clearest books on presentations I've ever read" - Javier, Verified Amazon Reviewer

"World class speaking tips that you can start using today..." - Michael Davis, Certified World Class Speaking Coach

"Hands-on book to craft a memorable mind-blowing speech..." - Tania de Winne

<http://amzn.to/18fD1Tn>

If you want to learn ADVANCED speech writing and public speaking techniques, then check out the following three books...

Public Speaking Mastery: How to Be Twice the Speaker in Half the Time

Click here: <http://amzn.to/18fD69T>

“Must-read for time starved professionals!” - Sean P. Graham

"The best speaking wisdom I have had in years" - Sandeep Gupta

"A public speaking book to be studied over and over again!" - Allan Kaufman

<http://amzn.to/18fD69T>

Storytelling Techniques for Electrifying Presentations

Click here: <http://amzn.to/1dJDK72>

“...tips for energizing not only your speech, but also your audience” - Angela Avery

“...perfect book for those who want to dominate the art of storytelling” - Alci Aguilera

“An excellent book that should be present in the collection of anyone who speaks in public and anyone who likes to tell stories to friends and family.” - Arthur, Verified Amazon Review

<http://amzn.to/1dJDK72>

How to Own the Room: Presentation Techniques to Keep Your Audiences on the Edge of their Seats

Click here: <http://amzn.to/1gvpfS0>

“...easily digestible and choke full of tips” - David Andrew Levy

“pithy and perfect...his tips coupled with a review of excellent presentations, are consumable (usable right away) and valuable!” - Eric Laughton, John Maxwell Certified Trainer

<http://amzn.to/1gvpfS0>

If you want to learn how to achieve your goals, overcome negative thinking and achieve more success in every area of your life, check out:

Stop Negative Thinking: What Not to Say When You Talk to Yourself

Click here: <http://amzn.to/1fWGAWz>

<http://amzn.to/1fWGAWz>

How Successful People Think Differently

Click here: <http://amzn.to/1hrhnnC>

“...no filler, no fluff - just the absolutely necessary information peppered with some great stories and practical examples. It is a quick read and a no-nonsense guide to making a lasting change in one's life.”

Mandy Hoffeldt

“...good book for many people who are still clinging to the fence, procrastinating and not achieving their goals.” - Allan Kaufman

“If you want to learn to think like successful people in a simple and practical way, you have to read How Successful People Think Differently” - Arthur

<http://amzn.to/1hrhnnC>

ONE LAST THING

When you turn this page, Kindle will give you the opportunity to rate the book and share your thoughts through an automatic feed to your Facebook and Twitter accounts. If you believe your friends would get something valuable out of this book, I'd be thrilled if you shared it with them.

Also, I would be very grateful if you could take a minute and post a review of this book on Amazon.

All the best,

Akash

<http://www.AkashKaria.com>